This book was written on the run and produced in a flash in order to honor Andrew Mazzone at the opening of a new phase—which he himself planned—in the history of the Henry George School of Social Science. To make this happen a number of people had to work exceptionally hard and do exceptionally good work. Tom Phillips did an immensely helpful reading and editing of the first full draft. Barbara Ross then followed up with subsequent drafts. Kenneth Wapner discussed every stage of the book with me and helped over and over with difficult passages, seeing it through from start to finish. Sam Truitt did wonderful work preparing the book and cleaning it of errors and infelicities. Many thanks to the President, Board of Directors, and Staff of the HGSSS, especially Andrada Chęrcheres, for supporting this project and providing help at crucial moments. Finally I want to thank my wife Marilyn Adams for her patience, sound advice and common sense.
